Superbas Fight Hard for Clean Score in Series, but Bow to Ozark Mountaineer.

The Giants traversed the long road, and finally found the turn. After four straight defeats at the hands of the Brooklyn Superbas McGraw's men wheeled about and won the final game of a double-header at Ebbets Field yes- BROOKLYN made the Superbas a factor in a had in which they had been only forlors hopes.

Brooklyn owed its victory in the opening game to a play seldom if ever seen, on Elbets Field, at any rate. It came in the eighth inning, when the score was tied. Myers on third base, Daubert on first and Buck Whoat at the bat wim one down. Wheat slashed for a moment and then tried to tag Daubert out. Jake doubled back and forth for a second, calling on Myers to run for the plate. Boyle then threw to first, and the fans believed that Wheat had been retired. Merkle then threw to Fletcher, whose return to Merkle retired Daubert.

Myers betimes had dashed for home, and crossed the plate just as Daubert was thrown out. The Giants, believing that a double play had been completed, left their positions, and Hart, the unpire, announced that Myers had not scored. Some of the Superbas, too, trotted for their places, but Ollie O'Mara noted that Hyron had ruled Wheat safe. He told Buck the glad tidings, and Wheat at once dashed of to second base, for no Giant was on the field to prevent it.

Amazed, the players looked at Byron, and the first game and Brakers players and Braker players and Brakers players Game a the Crescents got off to a bad start in the their first game in the Amateur League for series. The New Moon team played the recently organized Forest Hills a score of 8 to 3.

The diamond on which the game was played at Forest Hills is supposed to be a range for trench fighting. The pitcher is in a hole, literally, and he has fine practice in learning how to use hand grenades. The Crescent pitchers, it may be noted, were in the hole both ways nearly all the time, too.

The Crescents played against a combination of circumstances that couldn't be beaten. In the first place Forest Hills never made a mistake of any consequence, and nearly every drive from sequence, and nearly every drive from old, because it didn't flash any of the oldtime fight and pepper. But why should one expect fight, with Charley Beavers fairly bursting through his uniform, and Eddie Butler and Murray Lee getting in much the same condition.

Lee getting in much the same condition.

Murray played for Columbia as far back as four years ago, and Eddie was a Cornell hero two long years back. With only youngsters like Gil Kinney and Lew Doyle and Bill Bryan to match these ancients, one would expect Forest Hills to win. Gil played at Yale only in 1903, or maybe it was 1809, and Lew was a catcher at Princeton when Heyniger was in his heyday. No one seems to know when Bryan began to play, but he hasn't been gray haired very long, at that.

Well, this young Forest Hills club, with the young Kinney and Doyle and Bryan, not to mention Hunt Worth, spotted the aged and veteran Crescents to a three-run lead in the first two innings and then proceeded to run upeight runs, which just swamped the old 'uns from Bay Ridge.

Danny Hohman pitched for the Crescents for the first six innings, and though he was chery with his hits, he was profuse with his played him for the good thing he was, making seven of their runs while he was in the box. Murray Lee succeeded Hohman, and allowed only one run, but the horse was gone by that time.

by that time.

George Campion, who pitched ever so long ago for some college team or other, lasted all the way through for Forest Hills. The Crescents touched him up for six hits, but only two of these figured in their three runs.

Fontaine Fox, the fellow who draws comics, played left field for the Foresters. The Crescents thought he was as funny as his pictures until he began to snake in their drives like a real Ty Cobb. Fox, as a cartoonist, missed his calling, and he seems to know it, because he swaggers up to the plate
